RIGHT TURN COLLISIONS

One of the most difficult maneuvers done by truck drivers while on the road is a turn. Often, an incident between a truck and another vehicle can result from squeeze play or a wide turn.

Semis cannot make tight turns so when a tight right hand turn is necessary, a truck may begin the turn by first swinging wide to the left and then beginning the right turn. Also, as the truck swings left, it may not be clear for other drivers of the truck's intention to turn right and rather may look like a late attempt to change lanes. When this occurs, some drivers may be fooled into thinking the right lane is now clear and may proceed forward, placing their car between the truck and the right curb and in the path of travel once the semi begins to turn.

Always double check your mirrors and don't leave enough space for a vehicle to fit between the curb and your trailer.
